The Technical Reviewer Board proposed is useless. Those 3 persons will have no effective rights, and will be manipulated by Microsoft during 1 month each serves. One of two Board members is to be assigned by Microsoft, and the third one is also to be elected by that Microsoft assigned person. What a brilliant idea!

The Microsoft phenomenon can be viewed as promoting public computing ignorance through not educating and limiting choices. It is easy due to human nature. That's why it succeeded in the game. The document should forbid Microsoft promote its system in public schools without teaching equal or more time Linux or Unix systems. It is easy, too, but there is a powerful lobby in the US government that promotes Microsoft only. This is the primary reason the situation persists.
